Albert Rosenthal

ALBERT ROSENTHAL

Born January 30, 1863

Philadelphia, Pa.

Worked in lithography and etching with Max Rosenthal; studied drawing and painting at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, Philadelphia; Ecole des Beaux Arts, Atelier Gerome, Paris; Atelier, Anton Aschbé, Munich, Germany.

A coterié of collectors of autograph letters of worthies of colonial and revolutionary American history is responsible for the existence of the portraits contained in this list. It included the Hon. James T. Mitchell, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania; E. Coppee Mitchell, Esq.; Simon Gratz, Esq., and Ferdinand J. Dreer, Charles R. Hildeburn, Charles Roberts and Frederick T. Stone, of Philadelphia; Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet and John T. Hoffman, of New York; D. McN. Stauffer, Esq., originally from Lancaster, Pennsylvania, afterwards of New York. Clarence S. Bement, Esq., and the Hon. Hampton L. Carson, of Philadelphia, later became subscribers to these portraits as collectors of Americana.

Up to the time of the activities of these gentlemen, there was little attention given to the study of American history and its early portraiture. Desiring to have portraits to place with their autograph letters, they made efforts, and successfully, to locate the paintings and other original portraits of the authors of their letters. Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet was, and is, entitled to the credit of the greatest effort and success in this direction. Max Rosenthal was employed to make lithographs from the originals. This necessitated his drawing the portraits small in pencil from the originals (the collection of drawings were deposited by him in the Historical Society of Pennsylvania), the photographic art not having been developed to the point of copying paintings successfully up to that time.

The association, assistance and direction given by these patriotic and enthusiastic collectors made possible the publication of the portraits of the members of the Federal Convention contained in the History, edited by the Hon. Hampton L. Carson. The completion of the Portraiture and publication of the portraits of the Chief and Associate Justices included in Carson's

History of the Supreme Court of the United States and the Attorneys General of the United States, text by C. R. Hildeburn, was a logical continuance. The mezzotinto series and the large folio publications by the engravers were likewise a resultant of this early association.

The writer desires to put on record, that it was due entirely to the enthusiasm absorbed from these collectors that his work in oil took the direction looking to the development and completion of the Historical Collections of our city, state and nation. All information, the result of investigations and discoveries, covering a period of over forty years, secured by these gentlemen, was placed in his hands to this end.

1870, I should say, was the date of the beginning of the lithographic series. In 1882 a suggestion that these portraits be etched in copper was made, and this was the first essay in etching by both Max Rosenthal and Albert Rosenthal. In 1892 Max Rosenthal experimented in engraving portraits in mezzotinto, and the series of portraits described in an article in the Print Connoisseur in 1921 (which article was afterwards privately printed), was the result. The cumulative work is interesting, and, I might say, important, owing to the fact that these portraits are definite additions to American portraiture, as no existing engraved portraits were copied. Only those of whom no known lithographed or engraved portraits existed were made. The exceptions are the British Officers of the Revolutionary War in America, which were engraved from English prints. The edition of these private plates was limited to fifty copies. No effort has been made to make more than a working list of these portraits as their historical interest may be learned from biographical works.

ALBERT ROSENTHAL.

Philadelphia, January 1, 1923.

The portraits recorded are all of the same size generally, adapted to small folio, quarto, and 8vo. The etched portraits and portraits engraved in mezzotinto are plates 5 x 7 inches, with some exceptions, 7 x 9 inches.
